Alexei Abrahams will complete his PhD in economics at Brown University in May and join the UC Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation as a postdoctoral scholar studying the Israel-Palestine Conflict. During graduate school, Alexei lived most of a year in Jordan and the West Bank, learning Arabic and negotiating access to geocoded data from the UN and Palestinian census bureau. He wrote two of his dissertation papers on Israeli army road obstacles, checkpoints, and walls, and their redistributive effects on the Palestinian West Bank economy. He merged satellite imagery with geocoded economic data to enhance analysis. His dissertation represents the first academic research to apply satellite imagery to analyze the Israel-Palestine Conflict. He received a BS in mathematics and economics from Syracuse University.

Abhay Aneja is a PhD student at the UC Berkeley Haas School of Business and a JD candidate at Stanford Law School. His research interests are in the areas of law and economics, public economics, and the political economy of development. He received his BA from Wake Forest University.

Eli Berman is research director for international security studies at the UC Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation, professor of economics at UC San Diego, a faculty member in the School of International Relations and Pacific Studies, research associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research and a founding board member of the Economics of National Security Association. His research interests include economic development and conflict, the economics of religion, labor economics, technological change, and economic demography. His book Radical, Religious and Violent: The New Economics of Terrorism was published in 2009 by the MIT Press. Berman received his PhD in economics from Harvard University.

Michael Callen is an assistant professor of public policy at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government and a faculty research fellow at the National Bureau of Economic Research. He was a postdoctoral scholar at the UC Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation and the Center for Effective Global Action in 2011-2012. He completed his PhD in economics at UC San Diego. He has a BSc in econometrics and mathematical economics from the London School of Economics. His current research focuses on political economy, development economics, and behavioral economics.

Lynn Carter is the senior vice president for democracy, governance and conflict mitigation at Management Systems International, the US subsidiary of Coffey International, an Australia-based company with a global international development practice. After working in rural development and health in Yemen, Morocco and Pakistan, she worked with USAID to develop guides, tools and programs to strengthen democratic governance and mitigate conflict and violent extremism. She also helped design the development indicator guides for democracy, rights and governance (DRG) and countering violent extremism (CVE) programs for USAID. She has led DRG and conflict assessments and contributed to a range of analytic products intended to aid programming, including on tribalism and governance models and rule of law programming in Africa, and has helped design projects in these domains. She has lived and worked in Pakistan, Yemen, India and Egypt. She has published a book on... ethnic conflict in Egypt and articles in peer reviewed journals on Egypt and Afghanistan. She has a PhD from the University of London’s School of Oriental and African Studies in political development and the politics of the Middle East and a master’s degree from Harvard.

Sarah Daly is an assistant professor of political science at the University of Notre Dame. Her research interests include civil wars and peace-building, international security, and ethnic politics with a regional focus on Latin America. Her book manuscript, Organized Violence after Civil War: The Geography of Recruitment in Latin America, forthcoming with Cambridge University Press, explores the post-war trajectories of armed organizations. Her other research seeks to explain sub-national variation in insurgency onset, organized crime and state-building, recidivism of ex-combatants during war to peace transitions, state strategies towards ethnic minorities in the former Soviet Union, and the role of emotions in transitional justice regimes. She is a term member of the Council on Foreign Relations, and has spent time at the World Bank, Organization of American States, and Peace Research Institute of Oslo. She has also served as a fellow in the Political Science Department and at the Center for International Security and Cooperation at Stanford University, at the Saltzman Institute of War & Peace Studies at Columbia University, and at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at Harvard University.

Oeindrila Dube is an assistant professor of politics and economics at New York University, and an affiliate of the Bureau for Research and Economic Analysis of Development (BREAD). Her research seeks to understand the causes and consequences of conflict in developing nations. She has analyzed how commodity price shocks and foreign aid flows influence political violence. Her recent work examines the role of truth and reconciliation efforts in rebuilding war-torn societies. Her articles have appeared in the American Political Science Review, The Review of Economics Studies and the Journal of Politics. Professor Dube holds a PhD in public policy from Harvard University, MPhil in economics from Oxford University, and BA in public policy from Stanford University. She was also the recipient of the Rhodes Scholarship in 2002.

Joseph H. Felter is a senior research scholar at the Center for International Security and Cooperation, Stanford University and co-directs the Empirical Studies of Conflict Project. Felter retired in 2012 from the US Army as a Colonel, following a career as a Special Forces and Foreign Area Officer with distinguished service in a variety of special operations, diplomatic and other military assignments. He led the International Security and Assistance Force, Counterinsurgency Advisory and Assistance Team deployed throughout Afghanistan reporting directly to General Stanley McChrystal and General David Petraeus, advising them on counterinsurgency tactics, operations and strategy. Felter is a graduate of the US Military Academy (BS), the Harvard Kennedy School (MPA), and Stanford University (PhD). Felter’s research focuses on assessing and developing effective counterinsurgency forces and employment strategies.

Michael Gilligan is professor of politics at New York University. He researches the effects of international interventions (peacekeeping, post-conflict reconstruction aid and ex-combatant reintegration programs) on post-conflict societies. He has completed such research in Burundi, Cambodia, Nepal, Sudan and several other post-conflict environments. His research has appeared in the American Journal of Political Science, International Organization and other outlets. In New York his teaching includes advisement of undergraduate honors theses in the International Relations Honors major. At the graduate level he teaches courses on international cooperation at both the MA and PhD levels. In Abu Dhabi he teaches introduction to international politics, a course of civil war and international intervention and, during the January-term, an intensive three-week course on insurgency and counterinsurgency that includes a study trip to Nepal where students meet and interview leaders of the Maoist insurgency that lasted from 1996-2006, counterinsurgent leaders from the Nepalese army, and peace activists.

Julian C. Jamison is a behavioral economist whose research uses theoretical modeling, laboratory experiments, and field experiments to explore individual preferences and information, as well as how those attributes influence behaviors and outcomes. For instance, he has analyzed how risk tolerance and patience affect disparate constructs such as sexual behavior and entrepreneurial success. He is particularly interested in the methodological issues surrounding the notion of utility or subjective well-being, as well as the degree to which both individuals and societies either succeed or fail to maximize along this dimension. He is currently a section chief in the Office of Research at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, as well as a research associate at Innovations for Poverty Action. His research has appeared in academic journals ranging across disciplines from economics to information technology to linguistics to medicine to mathematics to philosophy, as well as online at the New York Times, Wall Street Journal, Business Week, Foreign Policy, Bloomberg, Forbes, Foreign Affairs, and elsewhere. Previous professional affiliations include Northwestern Kellogg, UC Berkeley, and the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, in addition to teaching multiple courses at Yale and Harvard. Julian holds BS and MS degrees in mathematics from Caltech and a PhD in economics from MIT. He has consulted for the World Bank, NASA, Lockheed-Martin, and NIH.

Robert Jenkins is the deputy assistant administrator for the US Agency for International Development’s Bureau for Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance (DCHA), simultaneously serving as executive director of the Agency’s Task Force on Syria. Previously, Jenkins served as the director of the Office of Transition Initiatives (OTI), the United States Government’s foremost political transition and post-conflict assistance instrument. A career civil servant, he was seconded to the US State Department where he served as deputy coordinator for reconstruction and stabilization at the Office of the Coordinator for Reconstruction & Stabilization from July-December 2009. Jenkins also served as USAID’s acting deputy assistant administrator for the DCHA Bureau from August 2008 until January 2009. Before assuming these roles, Jenkins served as OTI’s operations coordinator and Iraq team leader. Prior to joining USAID, Jenkins designed and implemented emergency relief and recovery programs with World Vision International in southern Sudan and Sierra Leone. As a Thomas J. Watson Fellow he worked under Archbishop Desmond Tutu in Cape Town, South Africa from 1991 to 1993. Jenkins holds a BA in history and government from Bowdoin College.

Ethan B. Kapstein is associate director and senior research fellow of the Empirical Studies of Conflict Project. He is also senior advisor and director for economics at the United States Institute of Peace and senior director and Arizona centennial professor of international affairs at the McCain Institute for International Leadership, Arizona State University. He is also a visiting fellow at the Center for Global Development and Research Affiliate at NBER. He has previously held chaired positions at the University of Texas at Austin, INSEAD, and the University of Minnesota. Ethan has also served as a vice president of the Council on Foreign Relations, principal administrator at the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development, and executive director of the economics and national security program at Harvard University. He is a former international banker and has served as an officer in the US Navy. He has been a visiting professor at Sciences Po (Paris), the University of Nice, the National Institute for Defense Studies (Tokyo) and the National War College (Washington, DC).
Patrick M. Kuhn is an assistant professor of comparative politics in the School of Government and International Affairs at Durham University (UK). Previously, he was a part-time lecturer at Princeton University’s Woodrow Wilson School of International and Public Affairs (2013-2014) and a postdoctoral research associate with the Empirical Studies of Conflict Project (ESOC) (2013-2014). He defended his PhD at the University of Rochester in 2013 and was a senior research associate with ESOC in 2012-2013. During his doctoral studies at Rochester he specialized in comparative political economy, with a special interest in the political economy of development and conflict. His dissertation research is on causes and dynamics of electoral violence, including the determinants of perpetrators and targets of campaign violence and the role of information and uncertainty with regard to post-electoral protests. In 2010, he conducted field research on this topic in Senegal.

Erin Lin is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Politics at Princeton University. Her research focuses on comparative politics, legacies of violence, the environment, and Southeast Asia. Her dissertation examines how the politics of land shape patterns of economic development in the post-conflict, developing world. Substantively, her chapters address the role of post-war harvesting practices in the formation of social capital and social protection schemes, as well as the impact of aerial bombing on land fertility, rice production, local consumption, and inequality. Her research has been funded by Fulbright, Luce, and Foreign Language Area Studies grants. She holds a BA with distinction in environmental studies and international studies from Yale University. She has previously held positions at the World Bank and the Center for Khmer Studies.

Nancy Lindborg is president of the United States Institute of Peace (USIP). Prior to joining USIP, she served as the assistant administrator for the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict and Humanitarian Assistance (DCHA) at USAID. From 2010 through 2014, Lindborg directed the efforts of more than 600 team members in nine offices focused on crisis prevention, response, recovery and transition. The nine offices of DCHA include the newly established Center for Excellence for Democracy, Rights and Governance, the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance, the Office of Food for Peace, the Office of Transition Initiatives, and the Office of Conflict Management and Mitigation. Lindborg led DCHA teams in response to the ongoing Syria Crisis, the Sahel 2012 and Horn of Africa 2011 droughts, the Arab Spring, the Ebola response and numerous other global crises. She has spent most of her career working on issues of transition, democracy and civil society, conflict and humanitarian response. Prior to joining USAID, she was president of Mercy Corps, where she spent 14 years helping to grow the organization into a globally respected organization known for innovative programs in the most challenging environments. Lindborg has held a number of leadership and board positions including serving as co-president of the Board of Directors for the US Global Leadership Coalition; one of the founders and board members of the National Committee on North Korea; and chair of the Sphere Management Committee. She is a member of Council on Foreign Relations. She holds a BA and MA in English literature from Stanford University and an MA in public administration from the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

H. R. McMaster is Director of the Army Capabilities Integration Center and Deputy Commanding General, Futures, US Army Training and Doctrine Command. Prior to his arrival at Fort Eustis he most recently served as Commanding General, Maneuver Center of Excellence and Fort Benning from June 2012 to July 2014. Previously he served as Commander, Combined Joint Inter-Agency Task Force Shafafiyat (Transparency) in Kabul, Afghanistan. He was commissioned as an officer in the US Army upon graduation from the US Military Academy in 1984. He holds a PhD in military history from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Lieutenant General McMaster’s previous command assignments include Eagle Troop, Second Armored Cavalry Regiment in Bamberg, Germany and in Southwest Asia during the 1991 Persian Gulf War; 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry in Schweinfurt Germany from 1999 to 2002; and 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment at Fort Carson, Colorado and in Iraq from June 2004 to June 2006. Staff assignments include Director of Concept Development and Learning at the US Army Training and Doctrine Command from August 2008 to May 2010; Special Assistant to the Commander, Multinational Force-Iraq from February 2007 to May 2008; Director, Commander’s Advisory Group at US Central Command from May 2003 to 2004; and squadron executive officer and regimental operations officer in the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment from July 1997 to July 1999. He also served as an assistant professor of history at the United States Military Academy from 1994 to 1996. McMaster’s military education and training includes the Airborne and Ranger Schools, Armor Officer Basic and Career Courses, the Cavalry Leaders Course, the US Army Command and General Staff College, and a US Army War College fellowship at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace. McMaster has also served as a senior consulting fellow at the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London.

Jeffrey D. Peterson serves in the Simon Center for the Professional Military Ethic at the United States Military Academy. He was commissioned from West Point in 1987 as an Armor officer. He served in a variety of leadership and staff positions in the United States, Korea, Cuba, and the Middle East. His last operational assignment was command of a cavalry squadron based at Ft. Lewis, WA. While in command, the squadron deployed to Baghdad, Iraq and conducted counterinsurgency operations during the height of sectarian violence in Baghdad and the beginning of the “surge.” His experience in using economics as part of an overall plan to improve stability in his area of responsibility motivated his desire to study the military’s role in economic development in a post-conflict environment and the role of economics as a component of successful stabilization operations. Colonel Peterson directed West Point’s economics program from 2008 – 2014 and now serves as the chair for the study of officership, where he supports West Point’s mission to develop leaders of character. He holds an MBA from the MIT Sloan School of Management and a PhD in policy analysis from the Pardee RAND Graduate School.

Arman Rezaee is a PhD candidate in economics at UC San Diego. His primary research aims to strengthen governance and government service provision in developing countries through information communication technology (ICT) interventions, in fields such as health, education, and livestock. He also conducts research on the historical causes and long-term impacts of institutions, and he is interested in a broad range of political economy issues in developing countries. Before starting his PhD, Arman obtained a Master’s in public policy from the Harvard Kennedy School and a Bachelor’s from UC Berkeley.

Kalev I. Sepp is senior lecturer in defense analysis at the US Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, California. Until January 2009, he served as the deputy assistant secretary of defense for special operations capabilities. Dr. Sepp was responsible for the US Department of Defense global counterterrorism portfolio. This included policy oversight of all special operations worldwide, and formulation of the Department’s global counterterrorism strategy. He received his appointment in July 2007. A former US Army Special Forces officer, he earned his PhD at Harvard University, and his Combat Infantryman Badge in the Salvadoran Civil War. His unit assignments included the 82d Airborne Division, the 2d Ranger Battalion, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, and the 2d Infantry Division, among others. He was also an instructor at the US Military Academy at West Point. He served as an analyst and strategist in Iraq and Afghanistan, and as an expert member of the Baker-Hamilton Bipartisan Commission on Iraq, a.k.a. the Iraq Study Group. For his service in Iraq and the Pentagon, he has been awarded the Department of the Navy Superior Civilian Service Medal, the Department of Defense Medal for the Global War on Terrorism, and the Secretary of Defense Medal for Exceptional Civilian Service. Dr. Sepp also graduated from the US Army Command and General Staff College with a Master’s degree in military art and science.

Jacob N. Shapiro is associate professor of politics and international affairs at Princeton University and co-directs the Empirical Studies of Conflict Project. His research focuses on political violence, economic development in conflict zones, and security policy. He is the author of The Terrorist’s Dilemma: Managing Violent Covert Organizations. Shapiro is a term member of the Council on Foreign Relations, an associate editor of World Politics, a faculty fellow of the Association for Analytic Learning about Islam and Muslim Societies (AALIMS), a research fellow at the Center for Economic Research in Pakistan (CERP), and served in the US Navy and Naval Reserve. PhD political science, MA economics, Stanford University. BA political science, University of Michigan.

Oliver Vanden Eynde is an assistant professor at the Paris School of Economics. He joined the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University as a visiting research scholar in 2013-2014. His research focuses on economic development, conflict, crime, human capital development, and the role of the military in developing countries. He has worked on the human capital effects of military recruitment in colonial India, the design of civil-military institutions, and the targeting strategies of insurgents in India’s Maoist conflict. Current research projects explore the relationship between crime reduction and economic growth, the economic and political impacts of rural infrastructure development, and the public finance of law and order provision. Oliver obtained his PhD at the London School of Economics in 2012, and his BA from the KULeuven (Belgium).

Juan F. Vargas is professor of economics at Universidad del Rosario in Colombia. He holds a PhD in economics from Royal Holloway University of London (2007). Prior to joining Rosario he was a visiting assistant professor at the UCLA International Institute and a visiting fellow at the Institute for Quantitative Social Science, Harvard University. He has also held visiting appointments at the Institute of Development Studies in the UK and the Research Department of the Inter-American Development Bank. His broad research fields are political economy, development economics and comparative economics, with a focus on the causes and consequences of conflict. His research has been published in Review of Economic Studies, Economic Journal, and top field journals in economics and political science. He was named University Distinguished Professor in 2014.

Tjip Walker is deputy director for learning, evaluation and research in USAID’s Bureau of Policy, Planning and Learning where he leads agency efforts to promote organizational learning, including more consistent and effective use of research and evaluation to inform development practice. Walker also leads efforts to adapt monitoring and evaluation techniques to complex environments. Previously at USAID, Walker served as the technical lead for the Office of Conflict Management and Mitigation, as senior conflict and governance advisor and Nigeria country representative for the Office of Transition Initiatives, and as a program manager for USAID/Cameroon. Earlier in his career, Walker was an assistant professor of political science at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. Walker holds an MPA from Harvard’s Kennedy School, a PhD in political science from Indiana University and a lifelong commitment to harnessing analysis to improve development practice.

Anne A. Witkowsky is the deputy assistant secretary of defense for stability and humanitarian affairs in the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy. In that capacity she has policy responsibility for humanitarian assistance and disaster response; DoD support to the security of US embassies; peacekeeping and stability operations; and international humanitarian law, rule of law and protection of human rights. She previously served as the acting principal deputy coordinator in the Bureau of Counterterrorism (CT) at the US Department of State, from August 2012-December 2013, serving also as the CT Bureau’s deputy coordinator for homeland security and multilateral affairs from 2009. In the position of deputy coordinator, she was responsible for homeland security matters related to overseas counterterrorism, terrorism designations and sanctions, screening and information sharing programs, and counterterrorism policy and programs in multilateral organizations. From 2000-2009, she was affiliated with the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) where she led projects on a range of international and homeland security issues, directing the CSIS Embassy of the Future commission, which examined enhancements to the effectiveness of the US overseas diplomatic presence; directing a domestic terrorist attack simulation exercise; and serving as the executive director of the Secretary of Energy-requested CSIS Commission on Science and Security. She also contributed to the Goldwater-Nichols studies on homeland and national security governance. During her CSIS affiliation, she authored a number of publications. From 1993-2000, she served as a director for defense policy and arms control on the National Security Council (NSC) staff, where she was responsible for European security and conventional arms control. Prior to her position at the NSC, Witkowsky served from 1988-2002 in the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), US Department of Defense, in the Office of Russia, Ukraine, and Eurasian Affairs and in the Office of European Security Negotiations. She began her career in the federal government as an OSD Presidential Management Intern. She is a recipient of both Superior and Meritorious Honor Awards from the Department of State, and of the Department of Defense Medal for Distinguished Civilian Service. She is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. She holds a BA in Russian and East European studies from Yale University. She received her MPA, with a concentration in international security, from Harvard University’s John F. Kennedy School of Government.

Laura Zimmermann is an assistant professor in the Department of Economics and the Department of International Affairs at the University of Georgia. She received her PhD and MA in economics from the University of Michigan, and a BA in philosophy, politics, and economics from the University of Oxford. Her fields of interest are development economics, labor economics, and political economy. Her research studies the impacts of poverty-alleviation programs in developing countries, the effects of weather shocks and natural disasters, and the causes and consequences of intra-household discrimination. Some of her recent work explores the labor market and political economy impacts of India’s National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme, including the effect of the program on the country’s Maoist conflict.
Empirical Studies of Conflict Team

Co-Directors
Joseph H. Felter (Stanford University)
Jacob N. Shapiro (Princeton University)

Members
Eli Berman (UC San Diego)
Ethan Bueno de Mesquita (University of Chicago)
James D. Fearon (Stanford University)
David D. Laitin (Stanford University)
Jeremy M. Weinstein (Stanford University)

Affiliates
Stephen Biddle (The George Washington University)
Lisa Blaydes (Stanford University)
Katya Drozdova (Seattle Pacific University)
Radha Iyengar (US Department of Energy)
Ethan B. Kapstein (US Institute of Peace and Arizona State University)
David A. Lake (Stanford University)
Beatriz Magaloni (Stanford University)

Please see esoc.princeton.edu for the full team list.